3 Read and Notice

Read the passage below.

Before the class held its outdoor history exhibition, Mia checked the forecast. It predicted light rain by afternoon. Her teacher had forewarned everyone to bring plastic covers, so Mia packed them with careful forethought. She could foresee a problem if the wind lifted the display cards, so she clipped them down. At the exhibition, Mia arranged a model in the foreground of her table and placed the information boards behind it. Her partner tried to foretell which display would attract the most visitors, but Mia laughed and said that was harder than forecasting the weather. Later, they sketched the front of a face and labelled the forehead. Mia noticed that fore- can point to something before in time or at the front in position. When rain finally arrived, the class was ready because the forecast and their forethought had helped them prepare.
